If assembled with electrical components and placed in hazardous areas, electrical equipment must be in conformity with local requirements for hazardous areas.

The technical data as well as the following instructions have to be adhered to:

- The devices must not be subjected to impacts exceeding 500J of energy and 1 m/s of speed
- The devices may only be operated with compressed air. The intake of compressed air must not take place in potentially explosive areas.
- Out-flowing exhaust air and leaks may stir up dust deposits and may subsequently result in a potentially explosive atmosphere.
- To avoid electrostatic charges and potential differences, all metal parts must be connected to the equipotential bonding.
- Prevent electrostatic discharges by means of suitable, installed on and cleaning measures. Processes that generate strong charges can result in nonconductive layers and coatings on metal surfaces becoming charged. Processes that generate strong charges are to be excluded
